LIVING ARCHAEOLOGY WEEKEND

Have you ever wondered what life was like in Kentucky a thousand years ago? Then come to the Living Archaeology Weekend and watch the prehistoric past come to life. During this event, Native Americans and other craftsmen demonstrate the way ancient cultures went about the daily business of living.

On an open terrace near Gladie Creek, this program is held annually to promote an understanding of the technologies used by Native Americans, and the need to protect Kentucky's fragile archaeological sites.

These generous sponsors actively support public involvement and appreciation of our cultural heritage.
